7 Signs of a Spiritual Calling

*How to Know if Mami Wata
Is Reaching Out to You*

A Note Before You Begin

The signs in this guide are drawn from lived experience — mine, and the experiences of the many seekers who have found their way to this tradition. They are not a checklist to be anxiously tallied. They are invitations to honest reflection.

If you recognize yourself in several of these signs, that recognition matters. It is worth taking seriously. At the same time, signs alone do not constitute initiation, and reading a guide does not replace the work of a genuine spiritual practice. What this guide can do is name what you may have been feeling for years without language, and point you toward what comes next.

Read slowly. Sit with each sign. The reflection questions at the end of each section are not decorative — they are the beginning of the real work.

With respect for your path,

SIGN 1

The Water Dreams

You dream of oceans, rivers, lakes, or rain with unusual frequency. These are not ordinary dreams. You wake from them feeling different — altered, cleansed, or strangely sad to have left. The water in your dreams is alive in a way that waking water never quite is. Sometimes there is a figure in the water. Sometimes you are the water.

Water in the dream world is Mami Wata's primary language. She speaks to those she has marked through the only channel that bypasses the rational mind: sleep. If these dreams have followed you across years, across cities, across life changes, they are not random. They are correspondence.

Reflection: Write down your three most vivid water dreams. What feeling did each one leave you with when you woke?

SIGN 2

An Unexplainable Pull Toward Water

You feel drawn to bodies of water in a way that goes beyond preference. Standing at the ocean's edge, beside a river, or even in a heavy rainstorm, something in you settles. Something releases. You feel more yourself near water than anywhere else — and less yourself when you are too long away from it.

This is not coincidence. Mami Wata's children are literally called back to her element. The pull you feel is recognition — your spiritual nature responding to its source. Many initiates describe spending hours at riversides or coastlines without understanding why, only knowing they needed to be there.

Reflection: How do you feel when you are near large bodies of water? When did you first notice this pull?

SIGN 3

Lifelong Sensitivity You Could Never Explain

You feel things deeply. Perhaps too deeply, by ordinary standards. Other people's emotions land in your body. Crowded places exhaust you. You sense things before they happen. You know when someone is lying, or suffering, even when they show nothing on the surface.

This sensitivity was not a flaw to be corrected. It was a gift arriving before you had the framework to understand it. Mami Wata's devotees are almost universally marked by heightened perception. The tradition calls this the water gift: the ability to feel beneath surfaces, to sense what flows under the visible world.

Reflection: In what situations does your sensitivity feel most powerful? Most overwhelming? What would change if you understood it as sacred?

SIGN 4

A Deep Feeling of Being Chosen or Apart

Even as a child, you felt different. Not better — different. Set apart in a way you could not name or explain to others. You may have longed to fit in while simultaneously knowing, somewhere beneath that longing, that fitting in was not really your path.

Those called to water spirit traditions often describe this feeling across their entire lives. It is not arrogance. It is recognition. You were marked early. The ordinary world was always slightly not-quite-yours because you were being shaped for something else. What felt like isolation was, in truth, preparation.

Reflection: When did you first feel this sense of being set apart? How has it shaped the choices you have made?

SIGN 5

Serpent Imagery That Finds You

Serpents appear in your dreams, in synchronicities, in art that inexplicably draws your eye. You may feel a strange kinship with serpent imagery that others find unsettling. Snakes do not frighten you the way they do most people. Or they appear at significant moments in your life, as if to mark a threshold.

The serpent is one of Mami Wata's oldest symbols. In many traditions she is depicted holding or entwined with a snake, representing wisdom, transformation, and the ability to shed what no longer serves. When serpent imagery pursues you persistently across time and context, it is not coincidence. It is signature.

Reflection: Have serpents appeared in your dreams or waking life at meaningful moments? What were the circumstances?

SIGN 6

Unexplained Gifts of Sight or Knowing

You have known things you had no logical reason to know. You have seen outcomes before they occurred. You have felt presences that others could not perceive. These experiences may have frightened you into silence, or you may have quietly collected them across a lifetime, not knowing what to do with the pattern.

Clairvoyance, prophetic dreams, and mediumistic sensitivity are among the most consistent markers of a water spirit calling. These gifts were not accidents of neurology. They were the early evidence of a spiritual capacity that, once properly cultivated, becomes the foundation of your service in this world.

Reflection: What is the most significant thing you have ever known before having any logical reason to know it?

SIGN 7

A Persistent Spiritual Hunger That Nothing Has Fully Fed

You have searched. Across traditions, books, teachers, communities. You have found pieces that resonated, and pieces that rang hollow. Something in you has always known there was more — a deeper layer, a more specific truth — that the things you tried were pointing toward without quite reaching.

This hunger is itself a sign. It is Mami Wata's call, sustained across time and resistance. The searching was not a failure of faith. It was the process of elimination, narrowing toward the tradition that was always yours. The fact that you are reading these words right now is not random. You found this because some part of you already knew where to look.

Reflection: What have you tried on your spiritual search? What has resonated most, and what felt like it was pointing toward something you hadn't yet found?
